LEADERSHIP CHALLENGES

Leading any active volunteer organization presents many challenges and requires skills. Describe how you will handle the following:

- a. As the President, you will be leading a team of volunteers who are creative and motivated. In the fall of each year, the CREW DC Board sets the priorities for the upcoming year and assigns resources to each task and a timetable for completion of the projects. During the course of the year, volunteers will identify additional important projects that cannot always fit within the resources. On what basis would you select and adjust priorities? How would you handle the response to a disappointed committee of volunteers?

- b. As the President of CREW DC, you are asked to consider a policy that is good for most members; however, some members do not think the policy is advantageous for them. Describe your communication to your chapter and the CREW DC Board regarding the position you want to take with this matter.

- c. What is your experience working within a team where everyone's opinion has equal weight and consensus decision making is highly valued? Please provide specific examples of your experience working in a collaborative environment where your ideas are considered but not always accepted as the best strategy for the organization.

- d. A strategic Board focuses on policy activities and assigns day-to-day operation to the Executive Committee chairs and committee members, as well as the Chapter Administration team. Explain your experience with and philosophy of sharing roles and responsibilities with both a volunteer and paid staff. Why is it important that a Board President understand the appropriate roles and division of tasks?

- e. In your opinion, what factors create effective and ineffective boards? Please include concrete examples of how you participated on a board to lead constructive participation. Identify the problem and your strategy for resolving the issue.
